

Where Can I Find a Psychologist?

Psychologists may be found in a variety of settings, including:

- Private practice office
- College counselling centres
- Universities and medical centres
- Employee assistance programs
- Community mental health centres
- Hospitals and health care facilities
- Family and child guidance centres

To find a Psychologist close to you, access the BCPA's Referral Service online, or call us. You can also contact your area community mental health centre, inquire at your place of worship, ask your physician or other health professional, or consult your local Yellow Pages.

Health Coverage

Psychological services are usually covered in part by Extended Health Plans. Other sources of funding for services may also be available depending on individual circumstances, for example, employee assistance plans.

Psychological services can also be claimed as a health care expense on your income tax. Your personal information is protected in compliance with the BC Personal Information Protection Act.

About BCPA

Since 1977, the BCPA has represented Psychologists in British Columbia. It is a voluntary body and is committed to advancing psychology, the interests of Psychologists, and the psychological well-being of all British Columbians. Our administrative office is in Vancouver.

We organize professional development and networking activities for our members, publish a quarterly newsletter—BC Psychologist—and operate the Referral Service.

BCPA provides a free, province-wide Referral Service to help you locate Registered Psychologists with extensive training and expertise in all areas of psychological and emotional well-being.

To access our referral system, please visit:

www.psychologists.bc.ca/referral.html

Psychologist Referral Service

BCPA provides a free, province-wide Referral Service to help you locate Registered Psychologists with extensive training and expertise in all areas of psychological and emotional well-being. You can access the Referral Service online from www.psychologists.bc.ca/referral.html, or by calling us.

When you call, a BCPA staff person will take pertinent information and then provide you with the names of Registered Psychologists conveniently located close to you. Confidentiality is strictly maintained.

Choose a Registered Psychologist

The British Columbia Psychological Association provides a free service to help you locate qualified Registered Psychologists in your community.

Looking for a referral? Visit our website:
www.psychologists.bc.ca/referral.html

If you cannot access our website, call our referral line at 604-730-0522 or 1-800-730-0522

You Are Not Alone!

Each year, more than 3 million Canadians seek help for their psychological concerns:

- Job worries
- Marital and family problems
- Illness or injury
- Death of a loved one
- Anxieties, loneliness, or depression

Many more suffer from stress-related conditions. Psychologists can help! In addition, Psychologists can provide comprehensive medical/legal and diagnostic assessments.

Why a Registered Psychologist?

Extensive Training

Psychologists are health care professionals with extensive education and training devoted to emotional health and well-being. On average, they have over nine years of post-secondary education, which includes practicum and/or internship experience. While in practice, they also continue to participate in continuing education to stay current.

Regulated Professional Standards

Unlike counsellors, Psychologists are regulated under the Health Professions Act and under rigorous ethical and professional standards set by the College of Psychologists of British Columbia. Registered Psychologists are permitted to use the designation “R. Psych.” after their names.

What do Psychologists do?

Psychologists are the only professionals extensively trained in psychological research, assessment, and treatment interventions. This training enables them to provide cost-effective and timely services contributing to renewed health for those troubled by psychological issues. Psychologists promote the building of attitudes and behaviours that are conducive to healthy lives and may prevent the development of serious illnesses. Some work with people and their environments to optimize their performance at work and play. Psychologists do not prescribe medications.

Make sure to look for the “R. Psych.” designation to select a qualified practitioner in your community and make sure he or she is registered with the College of Psychologists of British Columbia

Consider a Psychologist if you want to:

- Have specialized assessments completed for a variety of needs
- Enhance emotional health and well-being
- Reach for better relationships with your partner, family members and/or friends
- Learn ways to solve your problems and make decisions more effectively
- Find positive ways to deal with stress, crisis, trauma, and pain
- Move from feeling sad, nervous, or tense to feeling more positive and relaxed
- Deal with your concern about the emotional health of a family member or partner
- Address challenges that do not seem to get resolved despite your efforts

How to Choose a Psychologist

A Psychologist and a client work closely together in partnership. It is important to choose a setting and a Psychologist you are comfortable with, where you feel confident that your needs can be met.

The following sample questions may be useful in helping you consider a particular Psychologist:

- Are you a Registered Psychologist?
- I have been feeling (anxious, depressed, etc.). I am having problems with (my job, my marriage, eating, sleeping, etc.). What kind of training/experience do you have helping people like me?
- What might I expect during our sessions?
- What are your fees? What types of insurance do you accept, and how do you bill for services?

Feel free to prepare some questions relevant to your concerns and interview several Psychologists—by telephone or in person—before making a choice. These consultations will help you determine if the Psychologist you chose is right for you. Please keep in mind that consultations might not be free of charge.

Make sure to look for the “R. Psych.” designation to select a qualified practitioner in your community and make sure he or she is registered with the College of Psychologists of British Columbia.

Psychologists are the only professionals extensively trained in psychological research, assessment, and treatment interventions